2 Sm 12: 7-10, 13; Ps31:1-2, 5, 7, 11, Gal 2: 16, 19-21; Lk 7: 36-8:3

Repentance and forgiveness are at the core of today's readings on this Eleventh Sunday in Ordinary Time. In a Church year, dependent upon how our holy seasons fall, there are 33 or 34 Sundays in Ordinary Time. Thus, on this Eleventh Sunday in Ordinary Time, as difficult as it may seem to believe, we are one-third of the way through Ordinary Time. It is worth reiterating that for the Church and our time, the term "ordinary" does not mean "common." It is based upon the term "ordinal" which means merely counted time. It is good stewardship for us to know and understand the terms our Church utilizes. However, the important message for today is our understanding of repentance and forgiveness. In the First Reading from the Book of Second Samuel, David declares, "I have sinned against the Lord." There are some significant aspects to David's confession and repentance. In Hebrew, David actually said hata al-Yahweh, only two words. When Saul confesses, it is in great length and detail, but David's confession is perhaps even more sincere and more effective in spite of its brevity. David accepts total responsibility for his actions. He does not embellish it, and he makes no effort to find human excuses or rationalizations. Confessions do not need to be long, but they very much need to be honest and sincere.
